Editorial

Welcome to our newest issue! Unfortunately, we were only able to put in eight pages for this month, but this is only due to the lack of a few new advertisers which should be joining us in the next issue. All of the old column are here, and a special guest commentary, The CoCo Market, was submitted by Terry Simons from the Mid Iowa & Country CoCo Club. This is a national support club which puts out a newsletter during the fall, winter, and spring, and you can sign on to this newsletter as well as have access to their software library just by joining. If you would like more information, see their ad on page three.

Our software database idea is starting to take off with a few dealers already responding. Again I would like to emphasize, we need your help as well. If you have any information about any software products or "orphaneware", please let us know.

In closing, I would like to mention the two tentative upcoming

The CoCo Market

The CoCo power, the market place- what happened? Where will it go from here?

In the beginning, during, and in the end, the CoCo was bought by us, the seekers and the thinkers. We love to seek and get excited when we find. We are not the majority. We will spend the time to experiment and learn for the thrill of discovery. Put it all together and you will find: the CoCo was marketed not for everyone; it was marketed just for us!

To better understand third party software sales or their lack thereof, first look at the early 80's CoCo buyer. While computers were being sold in popular department stores, this buyer went to an electronics store. This might tell you he is more of a technical- or hacker-type than the average Joe. Many like myself did not even consider software as a part of their computer at the time of purchase. Rather, it was purchased as a part of a new technology, to be played with. And many did not have a serious want to use software, but instead toy with it a bit and look at it. Do we wonder why they did not want to pay $30-$60 just for a look?

For many years Radio Shack salespeople were forbidden to mention third party support. Still we began to discover magazines which offered software and hardware.

Enter, the third party

occupreneur, usually a person who was very adept at programming and the technical aspects of the CoCo, with little to no business and marketing experience.

But you did not really need it. Radio Shack only sold what someone on staff could throw together, which was poor at best. So if you could write something halfway decent and get together a few advertising dollars, you could become "McBig Soft" at your kitchen table. And many enjoyed the opportunity to become an instant occupreneur. Actually, the hobby in the den just grew to a hobby business of sorts or a great opportunity to sample what a business is all about. In 1985 through 1987, the CoCo was gaining popularity, with software relatively in short supply. Thus CoCoists were buying and trying just about everything. And there were those who had little conscience about taking and using the benefits of another person's effort without paying.

Experienced marketeers (of which the CoCo had very few) know every hobby has its saturation point. That point grew more evident in 1989 through 1991 as magazines, who to a large extent rely on software vendor's success, began folding, until we were left with Rainbow.

In actuality, most CoCo software companies were simply a hobbyist of extraordinary writing talent which turned into a kitchen table business. Big names like Cognetec (TeleWriter), Flexer

AND TOWARDS THE FUTURE...

For the last two articles, I have shown the similarities and differences between some of the popular operating systems today. But exactly how does OS-9 work? What makes it so special in industry applications? And why does NASA trust it to run some of the critical systems on board the space shuttles?

By definition, OS-9 is a real time preemptive multitasking operating system; yes, quite a mouthful. Taking that apart into its "component parts", you have "real time", "preemptive multitasking", and "operating system". We have already talked about what an operating system is, which boils down to the software that controls the resources and devices used by any programs.

The real time part states that the operating system can interpret and work reliably with real world applications. For example, OS-9 might control a conveyor belt's speed as objects are passed in front of a drill. OS-9 must be able to process the location of the object and adjust the speed of the belt within certain time and distance tolerances or the drill will bore a hole in the wrong place. OS-9 accomplishes this with an elaborate interrupt and signaling scheme which I will try to get to in a future article.

Preemptive multitasking means that the operating system will give control of the processor to the various programs that are executing at any one time and give control only for a certain period of time. At that point the OS-9 kernel will take away control from the program (or process as it is called) and move on to the next process waiting in the execution queue (which is an ordered list of the processes which would really like to be executed at some point or another). Since the kernel has the power to take away control at any time, it can effectively implement the "realtime" aspect in that a special event can be given top priority if necessary.

There are quite a few new terms above, such as process, queue, and event. Try to understand exactly what each of these terms mean in an OS-9 environment. RS-DOS, which most people are familiar with, is an extremely simple operating system in the sense that only one program can run at any one time, eliminating the need for the concept of a process or execution queue. RS-DOS has a limited ability to process events by setting up interrupts that actually interrupt a program and execute a special section of code when the interrupt occurs. However, RS-DOS itself does not really use any of these interrupts, so a program must set them up before it can take advantage of them.

Next month I want to spend some time discussing how OS-9 allocates memory and works with its modules.

UPGRADE National Diskletter! From: Mid Iowa & Country CoCo We are a national reachout!

Our "UPGRADE" newsletter mailed on Disk, has become a real hit with MAX III graphics accompanying articles. The articles from RSDOS Basic programming, and hardware, to OS-9 by James Jones of Microware; dump to screen (TV, Mono, or RGB) or printer. Sometimes with the news before the big mags, and editorials you will not see in the commercial magazine. With many user tips and ideas.

Our Power Packed Domain Library is purposely small relative to thousands available; because the few hundred disks there are carefully selected as "The Best Available"! Public Domain, Shareware, OS-9, & previously big named Orphanware programs.

We also have a "Christian Software Sub-chapter". Which simply offers Christian oriented software and listings for those interested.

Where can you buy? Or sell that equipment you've just upgraded from? Your free ads will be in the middle of the community.

Be in touch for Middle America's Fest '93 in Des Moines, IA.

Have you noticed the 3rd party market producers (i.e. support) dropping like flies in late fall? The shrinking Rainbow? The support of your CoCo is rapidly being left up to YOU! As third party decreases, belonging to a CoCo group is your only support. Radio Shack and a long list of magazines have folded it in. If one more magazine folds, where will you look next month?

Our eight year record speaks very well to reaching out and serving members. A strong treasury assures confidence of delivery. Most members are out of town or out of state! Presently we have paid memberships in 23+ states and 3 provinces of Canada. Plus five clubs, and some dealers. Our 90% renewal rate says most all feel MI&CC is very worthwhile. Join up and see why: even user groups by vote; sign up with a paid membership!

Your membership will bring you all Newsletters, Library, Voting, and other privileges, for a year. ($3 Sample disk)

NINE TIMES

(ADOS 2 & 3), and Van der Poel made big money. Yet none of the people gave up their daytime job. Of course not, as it was always a hobby.

Anyone trying to understand the CoCo third party market in a serious business-like manner will only find themselves confused. 80%+ were there by the vacuum created by Radio Shack's limited marketing of an inexpensive yet powerful computer. For the most part, the CoCo software industry was merely an extension of someone's hobby and not a real business at all.

There should be nothing belittling about the fact that these were hobby businesses. Many hard earned and serious dollars were poured into this pie. And some of the losses were not so sweet. I think it is great to see John Q. Average get an opportunity to experience his own business. I am sure it was a fun and educational experience for many.

I doubt if many overnight entrepreneurs even realized this themselves. And they made a bundle out of what began as a hobby. They took it seriously; their success went to their head, and they stomped off, leaving software rights to neither shareware or another vendor. Burying your accomplishments is a very poor epitaph.

The CoCo future? The lack of a serious software market has meant there are a lot of sophisticated capabilities that were not and will not be developed. And in reality Radio Shack has never supported the CoCo. None of this stopped it then, nor will it stop the CoCo now. Third party support will without doubt grow smaller. Yet we still have and will continue with excellent programmers. Anyone who even thinks thousands of $500+ systems are going to be thrown away is nuts.

The bottom line of the CoCo's future has already been decided, not by me or any individual, but by the many whom I have heard say, "I enjoy and use my CoCo. I don't want to spend a lot of money on something else when the CoCo does all I need. And I will continue using my CoCo!"

shows: the Mid Iowa & Country CoCo show in Iowa scheduled for March, 1993, and the 2nd Annual LastCoCoFest scheduled in Chicago, Illinois, for May, 1993. These shows really show a great amount of support in the way of dealer turnout, and if you would like to see firsthand some of the products and the faces behind those products, these shows are a great opportunity to do just that.

PIPELINE

Kala Software announced a new release of the UltiMuse package for OSK systems. Version 1.0 now includes the ability to use MIDI Events, which allow you to change patches [sounds] on a synthesizer during playback. The OS-9 version (4.8.0) will soon be upgraded to 4.9.0 and will also include MIDI Events. The next major update, version 5.0, will include the cut/copy/paste capability, which is accessed through "merge" and "append" in the program. This facility will allow you to easily transfer bits and pieces of music between files without resoring the song. This would also allow you to import premade sequences (such as drum patterns and chorus lines) to easily build songs. Mike Knudson is the driving (and programming) force behind UltiMuse, and his groundbreaking memory management tricks under OS-9 have even made their way to Microware. Kala Software, 3801 BrownBark Drive, Greensboro, NC, 27410, (919) 294-1558.
